

Privacy Policy for Emerging ag inc

Emerging ag inc acts as the secretariat to the International Agri-Food Network (IAFN) and the Global Business alliance for the Environment (GBA4E). We respect the confidentiality of your email address. Our newsletters are sent via Microsoft Outlook and no secondary services are used. Should you wish to unsubscribe from any newsletters by Emerging ag inc, please contact emerging@emergingag.com

Should you be registering for international meetings and Emerging ag is facilitating your registration, your contact data will only be shared with the UN or other registering bodies as required for you to participate in the meetings. At the UN, this sometimes includes the “expression of interest phase” before registration can occur and such applications are determined by the UN. Emerging ag will provide the necessary data to the UN but cannot guarantee the registration will occur. Delegation lists and biographies will be shared as provided to us or as is publicly available (if you have registered before we will keep your biography on file for use when you register again). Delegation lists published by Emerging ag inc do not include emails or contact information. In cases where conference lists are published by the event organizer and we have facilitated your registration, you will need to refer to the policies of the event organizers. Emerging ag does not accept responsibility for the privacy and data policy of those third parties.

For the High Level Dinner organized in the context of the CFS or the business symposium, your biography and photo will be shared with fellow participants, as supplied by you or as is publicly available. If you have attended before, we will keep your biography on file for use when you register again.

In the occasional instances where we facilitate travel and visa requests, if this applies to you, your information will be shared with the travel agents, airline carriers, hotels, and travel related actors, as well as any donors who pay for that travels as needed for our reporting requirements. This is for the purpose of facilitating such travel.

Emerging ag does not sell contact information nor personal data to third parties.
